Living on the coast, we naturally spend a lot of time outdoors and as homeowners, investing in our backyard space can tremendously improve the quality of our time spent at home.

With more consumers investing in new products and innovations, a product called NatureKast is taking the spotlight in the outdoor cabinet industry. It offers the first line of 100% weatherproof cabinets with the look and feel of a high-end indoor kitchen but constructed to withstand all weather conditions. They've taken a real wood Teak or Cypress cabinet door, and made a mold with all the rich grain character and then they fill it with a closed cell high-density polyurethane resin and hand finish it off with an exterior grade luxurious weatherproof finish. "We've got applications in Northern Canada that gets buried in the snow in the winter time, they're hosing it off in the spring and using it, and it looks brand new. Right down to the Gulf Coast where we've got coastal applications with salt water and moisture and no issues at all. The product is made to last a lifetime," says Mike Vahrmeier, VP of Operations and Finance at NatureKast.

Prepare to be amazed by the unlimited design options for your outdoor kitchen area with NatureKast's true to life cabinet panels that look like real wood, stack-stone and brick. Expensive mason-work and stone-work can be removed from the equation. Additionally, corbels, trim and crown moldings bring design options that can
